SHIRAS MOOSE-hunting information

Although slightly smaller than the Canadian Moose, Shiras bulls are still huge animals and trophies up to 50 inches are always a possibility. Shiras may be hunted both during the rut in early October or on the winter range in November. For the past 5 seasons both of these hunts have been virtually 100% successful on 7 day hunts, so it depends on your schedule and how you like to hunt when trying to decide which date to choose.

Rut hunts are a combination of driving, walking, calling and waiting....and waiting...and more waiting, listening for a responsive bull that is in the right mood to investigate what he perceives to be either his next love or his next fight. Every day during these hunts you will be within hearing range of bulls but it's often a day or two before one can be lured in. During a 7 day rut hunt you will likely see fewer bulls than on a November hunt but the ones you see will be noisy, close and likely very angry that you are talking to them! The excitement of calling in a trophy bull is hard to match on any other North American hunt!

Once the rut ends in mid-October Bull Moose can be very difficult to find. They are usually hidden in the darkest swamps and forests resting and recovering from all the energy they've put into the breeding season. This seems to all change when the first real cold weather arrives in early November. Bulls often join up with their former rivals and form small bachelor groups as they move onto the winter range. Cold weather causes the moose to feed more during daylight hours and on bitterly cold sunny days they often bed in the open to absorb warmth from the sun. The colder it is the better the hunting is and hunters need to be dressed for severe Canadian cold, but the rewards far outweigh the short periods of discomfort. November hunts are spot and stalk style hunts and transportation is by 4X4, tracked Argos or by snowmobile depending on snow depths and hunter preferences.

CANADIAN MOOSE– hunting information

The Northern Rocky Mountains of British Columbia are home to some big trophy class Canadian Moose. Most bulls that reach maturity will be at least 50 inches wide and a few will break the 60" mark! Covert Outfitting hunts some very remote valleys that have seen few people and are mostly undisturbed; because of this, older bulls make up a relatively large percentage of the moose population.

The best time to hunt Canadian moose is during the rut. Our hunts are timed to take full advantage of the breeding season when the secretive bulls can be drawn into the open. Even after calling moose for years, the adrenaline, anticipation and excitement of calling a huge bull into close range never diminishes. Every hunter needs to experience this to truly understand and appreciate the feeling. Pre-rut and post-rut hunts are also available at a discount. These are still very successful hunts and elk or bear make a great add on to any hunt. Access to our Canadian moose territory is by riverboat, atv and 4x4 vehicles, so hunters can be sure they will get the true Canadian wilderness experience. Hunting is based from a well-equipped wall tent camp, from here hunters travel to various locations calling for bulls. Once your trophy has been harvested your experienced energetic guide will then quarter and pack all meat, antlers and cape back to camp and prepare it for shipping. This is the most physical part of the hunt so older hunters or anybody with a disability shouldn't be discouraged from coming on a Canadian moose hunting adventure, you can let Covert Outfitting take care of the hard work while you reflect on the success of your hunt.
